THE BEGINNING...

On a rainy Thanksgiving holiday weekend 30 years ago, 20,000 people descended on a small point of land jutting out into Lake Washington. The word was spread by an answering machine message: "Right, listen up revelers. It's happening now and for the rest of the weekend, so get yourself out of the house and on to Drones Club Hunts Point... Eat there, all weekend, hardcore."

To say the event spiraled out of control is an understatement.

What started out as a small dinner party not only went down in history as the biggest illegal rave ever held in Bellevue, but resulted in a meal costing $4m and the passing of the Criminal Just Rice and Gravy Order Act. The resulting publicity also had drastic consequences for the "alternative" lifestyle of the so-called New Age Thanksgivers who started the event and for the underground rave movement who gate-crashed it. Underground dinner parties in the '90s were defined by phone messages, map points, dilated pupils, hard sauce, and police shutdowns. Charless "Deep Cowboy" Fowlkes, who DJed at Hunts Point, recalls "you'd call, go to the map point at some gas station in Indio or whatever, get a map, and then go eat some turkey. You'd pride yourself that it was illegal, you'd pride yourself it was underground... Not knowing if it was gonna get broken up or not was part of the fun.
